I chose to draw three women who have changed the world for themselves and for others around them. Drawn in graphite and mounted on black poster board are Anne Frank, Malala Yousafzai, and Harriet Tubman. These three women not only helped and inspired others in their time, but still continue to impact the world today. Anne Frank did far more than write in her diary; she expressed and preserved herself within those pages while capturing the horror of the Holocaust.

Malala Yousafzai was shot by the Taliban for trying to get an education for girls all around the world. Harriet Tubman was a slave who ran away to freedom but she returned and knowingly put herself in danger to help others gain the freedom that she had achieved. All three women did not focus on the negative in their lives, even in the midst of tragedy and horror; that, combined with their bravery, is how they changed the world.
